Financial Aid Displacement – Check Your School Financial Aid Package Before Applying:

Private scholarships can be an important piece of paying for college. However, students should know they can also impact the financial aid award packaged offered by the school they select to attend. Upon acceptance of a student, colleges and universities provide a Financial Aid Award Letter. The letter presents the expenses that comprise the Estimated Costs of Attendance and a financial aid package that lists all the aid you are eligible to receive. It is intended for you to see and fill the gap between the cost of attendance, financial aid offerings, and therefore the amount you/your family will need to pay.

This package includes aid offered directly by the school in the form of grants (typically need-based) and scholarships (typically merit-based.) Some colleges reduce their contribution to the financial aid package (school grants or scholarships) when a student secures outside private scholarship dollars – known as Financial Aid Displacement. This is especially likely in cases where school grants and scholarships cover a large portion of the cost of attendance, leaving only a small gap for what students/their families must pay, and a new outside scholarship results in them having financial aid that actually exceeds the cost of attendance.

We strongly recommend that you reach out to the financial aid office of the post-secondary institution you plan to attend and request an explanation or copy of its Outside Scholarship Policy and how they address financial aid displacement. This will ensure you can anticipate any financial aid consequences if you receive new outside scholarship funds.
